Regional politics development had based on well known principles since 1957. CEE had as purpose the harmonious and balanced development of the member states, following the increase of the economical level and the realization of a growing life standard of the citizens from member states. Since between 1989, Romania had economical connections with the European Union, connections that were consolidated and developed after 1990. Because of this, Romania benefited by a considerable financial assistance benefiting in this purpose of three financial instruments: Phare, Ispa and Sapard. The structural funds are financial instruments through which EU acts for the elimination of economical and social disparity between regions for the realization of the economical and social cohesion. Romania benefited by 28 billions euro from EU (agriculture and rural development, over 11 billions euro, structural instruments over 17 billions euro).
